Warren / AP Activists of the Movement for Black Lives blocking the entrance to the Harvard-Massachusetts Institute of Technology campus on October 20, 2015 in Cambridge, MA. John Bothwell/ AP By hewing to the mantra of "We are All Steve," the student government at Harvard University has for several years resolved to fight white supremacy, misogyny, and everything else that it is not. The decision on October 21 to purge its leadership of all "racists" and other members of the administration who believe that the "black lives matter" movement is fomenting violence against police, who follow such a code of "policing for profit" as leading the way to white supremacy, came as a surprise. "We are all Steve," means that everybody is guilty of something. "Despite decades of public criticism, Harvard remains unwilling to address systemic racism as a part of the problem that is leading to its recruitment, retention and underrepresentation issues in highly-competitive fields such as engineering," says the student activist Noor Tagouri, co-president of the African-American Leadership Alliance, and leader of the failed effort to eject eight black students from the all-white Harvard union executive board. "This is not a sustainable model," she said. "The interests of the black community are not represented by a system that is facilitating the incarceration of black people and leading to police brutality." As tagsouri and her colleagues prepared to shut down the Harvard SS/A—the Harvard "all-stakeholders" student government that for years has been characterized by its racial segregation—The Harvard Crimson conducted a poll on the issue and found that 61 percent of black students and 51 percent of black faculty agreed that black lives matter. Harvard is one of the most selective universities in the country, in part because it is the alma mater of two former U.S. presidents
