The latest version of Autocom / Delphi 2014.3 is available to upgrade to 2014.4. Autocom / Delphi 2014.3 is a Complete Tool including. Autocom / Delphi 2014.3 2013.1.1 (2013.1 release). MVC 3 (Model-View-Controller). T cell resistance to inhibition by immunosuppressive drugs, alpha-CD3 monoclonal antibody and radiation. T cells express a high-affinity Fc receptor for mouse IgG2a (FcgammaRIII, CD16). This receptor, which is present on the majority of T cells, can be functionally activated by immunosuppressive drugs (corticosteroids and cyclosporin A) and alpha-CD3 monoclonal antibody. Drug resistance was demonstrated by inhibition of drug-induced T cell activation using human IgG2a anti-mouse FcgammaRIII mAbs. Resistant cells could be isolated from enriched T cells by culture in vitro in the presence of 10-100-fold higher concentrations of the drugs. The resistant phenotype was propagated by serial passaging of sorted drug-resistant cells with multiple in vitro drug exposures. In vivo the drug-resistant phenotype was generated by administration of dexamethasone to mice. Resistant T cells were recovered from the lymphoid tissues and exhibited normal growth characteristics. The resistance phenotype was stable for long periods in vivo and resistant cells could be obtained by dilution cloning in cell culture. As a group, T cells resistant to inhibition by corticosteroids, cyclosporin A and alpha-CD3 monoclonal antibody were found to be normal as judged by: a) cell surface phenotype; b) leukocyte functional responses to mitogens, superantigens, and surface ligand/receptor interaction with staphylococcal protein A or intercellular adhesion molecule-1; and c) radioresistance in clonogenic and mixed lymphocyte reactions. These results provide evidence that T cell resistance to inhibition by corticosteroids and cyclosporin A occurs in addition to the previously characterized resistance to inhibition by CD3 monoclonal antibody. 1.
