Intracranial hemorrhage is a complication associated with acute disseminated encephalomyelitis (ADEM), and its risk is increased in the presence of abnormal cerebrovascular reactivity, seizures, and focal neurological symptoms. We report a child with ADEM who presented with acute-onset neurological symptoms, who rapidly deteriorated and was treated with corticosteroid therapy. A magnetic resonance imaging scan subsequently revealed multiple lesions in both cerebral hemispheres, in addition to a left occipital infarction. A progressive, subacute decline in the mental status was observed despite corticosteroid therapy. A new magnetic resonance imaging scan at 26 days following onset showed extensive enhancement of multiple large subcortical and deep white matter lesions in the brain. An MRI-guided angiogram demonstrated a large, unidentified internal carotid artery aneurysm. The enhancement disappeared on reexamination at 6 weeks, and no recurrence of the lesions was seen in the subsequent 9 months. Our patient suggests that intervention is warranted for ADEM-related, large, symptomatic intracranial aneurysms. List of best-selling albums in the United States This is a list
