A couple of days ago he posted this Here's a shameless self-promotion... I'm "collecting" photos for the final yearbook cover. If you'd like to contribute one of your photos to the cover, please send it to me. You may send it as a jpg or png file. (It must be a maximum of 300 dpi.) Please send it to me at: aloha at boltsauce dot com with "cover photos" in the subject line. (Thanks!) Q: Resolve all references of parent object without knowing names of child object? I have a singleton Class A that has two child objects like this: A a1; A a2; A a3; A a4; An enumeration type B that references A. I want to "resolve" all instances of A. I don't want to know the names of the instances. Instead, I need to resolve just the singleton object with A.

The way I'm doing it now it has the following properties: 1.All types are defined in a single namespace. 2.Every type in the namespace is abstract. This means that I have no type of A. The only thing I can create is a reference to the singleton class. By using reflection I'm able to create an instance of type A and all instances are of type A. The only problem with this solution is that I cannot get the names of the instances without knowing their names. Can you suggest how should I approach this problem? A: Given this scenario it seems that a static "get" method is the best solution for you.

public abstract class A { public static A GetA() { 6d1f23a050
